

Good Sense Of Humour Presents:

TERRY SAUNDERS

Terry Saunders' second Fringe show is about a sixteen-year-old boy struggling with newfound love, loneliness and teenage kicks.

Nathan Cooke is that boy, he likes music and draws on his bag in biro. He should be in Glastonbury discovering women, but is in fact on holiday with his mother against his will. To exact his revenge on her for keeping him from possibly kissing a girl for a first time he takes a vow to only speak in Pulp lyrics... it works.

" a fulfilling, grown up piece of comedic artistry" - CHORTLE

"You're cool" she said. "So do you only speak in Pulp lyrics?"
He nodded yes. She asked why.
"Mother, I can never come home again"
"Your mum? Does she make you?"
Nathan laughed a bit at the thought, then looked pensively into the middle distance as he rifled through his interior database.
Without changing his gaze he just uttered "cos everybody hates a tourist"
"You hate her? Why?"
"Because there's nothing else to do."

Terry Saunders is twenty-six years old, likes music and misses the indie charts. As a stand-up comedian Terry has done over 250 gigs. In 2004 he reached both the final of the London Comedy Festival New Act Competition and the final 50 of the BBC New Comedy Awards; in 2005 he was a finalist in the Laughing Horse New Act Competition and he took his first full length one man show "Romantic Comedy" to the Edinburgh Fringe Festival where it became a cult hit.

A bruised heart comedy show from this "loveable loser with witty one liners" - THREE WEEKS
" an engaging, touching story, and one that Saunders presents coherently, eloquently and with bags of empathy. " - CHORTLE

Terry has been writing and performing comedy for several years and was a member of the Soho Theatre Young Writers programme. In 2004 he was shortlisted in the BBC's "two timing" competition with the radio play "Crushing Grapes in Bromsgrove". In 2003 he was at the Edinburgh Festival with "Insert Punchline Here", at the Gilded Balloon, a sketch show in which he was writer and performer.
